

HELLO

- 1. What is your name?
- 2. What organization are you affiliated with?
- 3. What do you hope to receive during this training?
- 4. What do you hope to give during this training?
- 5. What is one fun fact about you?

"Introduction Interviews" Activity found in the Facilitator Guide.

Engaging in the work of exploring one's own values, attitudes and emotions can often be challenging. Here are a few guiding principles to make the journey easier and more productive.
	Engaging in the work of exploring one's own values, attitudes and emotions can often be challenging. Here are a few guiding principles to make the journey easier and more productive.
	-

Confidentiality: Throughout the training, others might feel inclined to share insights, stories or memories with you or the entire group. It is important to remember that anything that is said or discussed in the sessions should remain confidential, unless someone specifies otherwise. Retaining this confidentiality will foster a safe and trusting space for all participants to delve deeply into the content and practice.

Trust and Openness: Allow everyone to speak his or her mind and to disagree. The content in CIT is not black and white. People will challenge each other. This diversity is an important part of the self discovery that is critical to the process. Remember to remain open and allow differences to be heard and valued.

Speak from "I": We often speak in a way that states our opinions or perspectives as facts. There is a difference between saying "Eggs are disgusting" and "I think eggs are disgusting." The latter states one's opinion but respects and allows room for other views. Speaking from "I" actually gives more value to your statements. It helps cultivate a sense of confidence and empowerment. Don't Give Advice: Even though it might seem tempting, refrain from giving advice during CIT sessions. You can suggest ways that you or someone else might approach the situation, but allow others to come up with their own ideas and solutions for their issues. Oftentimes, people simply want someone to listen. Rather than giving advice, try to actively listen by not interrupting or redirecting the conversation.

In CIT we are aiming for gradual progress, not instant results or perfection. Changing the course of a sailboat by only a few degrees would not seem to make much of a difference at first but over time results in reaching a completely different destination at the end of one's journey. Likewise, if we make small, seemingly insignificant changes in our life, we will find that over time our life is moving in a different, more productive direction. Many of the practices in CIT can appear challenging, but there is no need to feel discouraged if one does not achieve quick results. Remind yourself that CIT is meant to be practiced consistently over time, and that lasting change often comes slowly. Measure your progress over months and years, not days and weeks, and you will feel more encouraged.	7.
	_
	_
	-
	-
	-
	-
	-
	_
	_
	_
	_

Presenter Notes:

CIT teaches many different skills and includes a lot of information. You may find particular skills of benefit, but you may find others that you do not enjoy or that you feel are ill-suited for you. That is perfectly fine. CIT is structured so you can take whatever you find most valuable and leave whatever you don't want or like. That being said, we encourage you to think critically about the topics, try everything with an open mind and then decide for yourself.

Each module builds upon the previous module. Therefore, it is critical for you to attend as many sessions as possible if you are to gain the most from the program. If you are unable to attend all the sessions, you should try not to miss more than one or two. If you do have to miss sessions, you should try to listen to the associated podcasts.

Presenter Notes:

- 1. Be totally present for the other person. We rarely have someone's undivided attention during a conversation. It is a gift. This presence can manifest through maintaining eye contact and verbal and nonverbal gestures that let your partner know that you are following what he or she is saying. Please turn off any electronic devices to prevent unexpected distractions and interruptions.
- 2. Try not to ask questions. Although we are not always conscious of it, questions have a tendency to drive a conversation in the direction the questioner wants it to go, rather than where the responder wants to take it. If you feel you must ask a question, make it something like, "Is there anything more you would like to add?"
- 3. Try not to give advice. The purpose of these conversations is to allow your partner to vocalize important experiences or insights, and to have someone honor them by listening attentively and without judgment. Often, instead of truly listening, we spend time thinking about what we would give. While this urge can be motivated by compassion, it can also interfere with our ability to actually be fully present to what the person is saying.
- 4. Keep everything your partner says in total confidence. Nothing creates safe space more effectively than trust. Knowing that each of you will keep everything you hear confidential

Compassionate Integrity Training A Secular Ethics Approach to Cultivating Personal, Social and Environmental Flourishing

will build that trust.

